Physical Creativity Meets Digital Learning

Product

Children color a Scanvas sheet, photograph it in the browser, and the artwork comes alive with motion, sound, and facts.

Customers

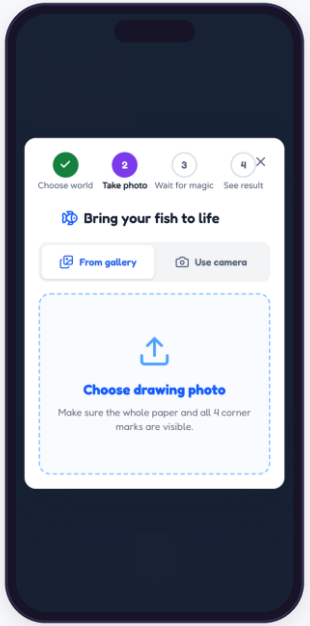

B2C: parents of children aged 3–10. B2B: PAUD/TK, TPA, schools, and children's activity organizers.

Value proposition

Hands-on creativity stays at the center; technology extends it into interactive learning, with no app to install.

Landing page

Alive in the world

Creativity Often Stops at the Paper

Children love drawing and coloring, but once the page is finished, the learning moment ends. Many screen-based activities are designed around watching and swiping rather than creating.

On paper

Creative and hands-on, but it ends when the page is done.

Create → Finished → Stop

On screens

Engaging, but children mostly watch instead of make.

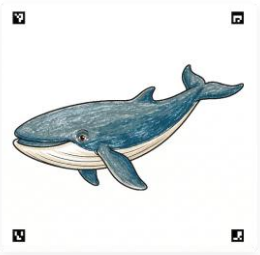

Watch → Swipe → Watch

Opportunity: activities that join hands-on creativity, digital play, and learning.

Their Creation Becomes the Character

Children color a printed sheet, scan it through the website, and watch their own artwork become an animated character with sound, motion, and educational content.

Appendix A · Technology Edge

1 Computer-Vision Scan

Four printed markers guide perspective correction, cropping, and masking of the photo.

3 Code-Linked Sheets

Each printed sheet carries a unique access code tied to its template.

2 Personalized Animation

The extracted artwork, not a stock character, is animated in the world.

4 Reusable Content Engine

New worlds are new sheet templates plus world assets on the same pipeline, so content scales without rebuilding the product.
